

AUGUST, 2008 NEWSLETTER

Hello friends!

August is rapidly slipping by, along with summer...

July and early August found me doing some extensive remodelling in the house, of course this took a lot of my time as well as being disruptive with more to go yet to finish, but the end of it is within sight.

With fall coming up soon, I will be buying more clay and working on additional models, probably I will add a couple of Art Deco designs to start with.

I have also just begun setting up one of the Public School gargoyles for it's mold, hopefully sometime soon it will be done, I've had many asking about these and so this one will start the process. More updates on that as it progresses.

I also purchased a new Canon camcorder, and have been adding some videos to my youtube account, one video shows one of the gargoyles being setup for the mold, more of this will be uploaded as it happens, to view this one specifically see:

I held off making molds of these also because I have not been happy with the rubber I have been using, now I found a much better product that shows excellent properties.

For the list of videos, maybe one or two might be of interest to you- the rest are technical related clips produced mainly for general interest to sculptor colleagues, though some do show a few pieces of my work, they can be found here:

Another important change has been switching to FedEx for shipping, DHL actually LOST two of my shipments in 6 months, and managed to totally destroy one of the crated Art Deco Folies panels shipped to a client in California. Amazingly, the 2nd lost shipment was a 37# box to another California client.

How does a shipping company LOSE a 37# box???
